Rabbi Weinstock's Message:

TRUTH, AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH

At the end of Parshat Vayeshev, Yosef shifts roles from dreamer to dream interpreter.

After interpreting the Chief Butler's dream, the Chief Baker decides to share his dream because: Vayar Sar HaO'fim ki TOV patar. Rabbi Yaakov Mecklenburg, 19th century German Rabbi, in his commentary HaKetav V'hakabalah, explains that Tov here means "correct" or "true: Which begs the question: how could the baker know that Yosef's interpretation was true, before it came to be? Did Yosef have some inside information about the standing of these two prisoners? Did the dream of each one contain the interpretation for his friend's dream? The Rashbam explains simply: Nikarin Divrei Emet– the truth speaks for itself.

We unfortunately live in an era where the self-evident nature of truth is no longer widely perceived. Perhaps it is due to the internet and the overwhelming amount of accessible, unverified (not fact checked) information. Perhaps it is due to the overall pervasiveness of relativism.

Perhaps it is our skepticism towards those who claim to "know the truth." Whatever the cause, the result is that we live in an age in which Lo Nikarin Divrei Emet: the truth is not self-evident.

"Truth doesn't need proof to exist – only people brave enough to live it."

It seems that in today's world, people are comfortable with the notion that everyone can have their own, equally valid truth. This attitude can lead to moral relativism and a decline of society. A hallmark of greatness is the willingness to speak the truth– even when it is unpopular, even when it is dangerous. Yosef provides us with a model. At the beginning of the Parsha, he speaks the truth of his dreams even though it is met with scorn by both his brothers and his father. He speaks the truth to the Wife of Potiphar, even as it causes him to lose everything he had and lands him in jail.

Finally, at the end of the Parsha, Yosef's truth speaking is recognized by his fellow prisoners and declared to be Tov, good: not just now, but all along and always. Another speaker of truth is Yehuda. The Tosefta in Brachot quotes Rabbi Akiva's question: By what merit did Yehuda become the tribe of the monarchy, Jewish leadership? One answer suggested is "Mipnei Shehodeh B'Tamar." He admitted the truth of his mistake even though such an admission could have been very costly. Telling the truth can be impressive and even ameliorate mistakes. Sometimes the truth hurts. Sometimes the truth is inconvenient. Sometimes the truth is depressing. Nevertheless, we must learn from the model of our forefathers, especially from Yosef and Yehuda, and be willing to speak the truth: in our homes, in our communities, and to the world. According to the Kabbalists, this world is an Olma D'shukra, a realm of deceit. The Talmud (Shabbat 55a) states that Chotamo shel Hakadosh Baruch Hu Emet: God's signature is truth. The task for us, then, becomes clear: to speak the truth and replace the deceit in this world with the sanctity of God's signature characteristic: truth.
