Rabbi Weinstock's Message:

BELIEVING IS SEEING

Parshat Shelach begins and ends on the topic of sight. The Parsha opens with the episode of the spies. Moshe sends ten distinguished Jewish leaders to tour the Land of Israel (perhaps the first Jewish leadership Moses sent them to scout the Land of "יְשַׁלַּח אֹתָם מֹשֶׁה לְתוֹר אֶרֶץ כְּנָעַן"; mission to Israel) Canaan." The mandate was clear: go and see the land firsthand and report back to the people 1) the beauty/bounty of the land and 2) strategies for victory in the anticipated wars with the current inhabitants. Moshe continues "וּרְאִיתֶם אֶת־הָאָרֶץ מִהֲהוּא וְאֵת־הָעָם הַיֹּשֵׁב עָלֶיהָ הַחֹזֵק הוּא הַרְפָּה הַמְעַט הוּא אִם־רַבּ:" "You shall see what [kind of] land it is, and the people who inhabit it; are they strong or weak?" "אִם־רַבּ:" Are there few or many? The plan here is in line with the expression "seeing is believing". Moshe's hope was that by seeing the land, the spies would believe in the goodness of Hashem's plan. The power of seeing something is well documented within Jewish tradition. At Har Sinai the nation saw a manifestation of God: unlike anything in history. Right after the Ten Commandments, Hashem says "אֲתֵם רְאִיתֶם כִּי מִן־הַשָּׁמַיִם דִּבַּרְתִּי עִמָּכֶם": "You have seen that from the heavens I have spoken with you."

According to the Talmud, only eyewitness testimony can be accepted by Beit Din. As to why hearsay cannot be accepted by a court, the Talmud explains: "Eino Domeh Shemiya L'Re'iya", seeing is much better than hearing. My family and I will, please God, be going to Israel this summer. I am excited about our itinerary, and the potential it has to foster in us an enhanced Chibat HaAretz, a love for the Land of Israel, through the sites that we see. As much as we read and hear about it, nothing beats being in Israel and seeing the Land firsthand.

And yet we all know that our eyes can deceive us. Obi-Wan Kenobi was right when he told young Luke Skywalker, "Your eyes can deceive you, don't trust them." Neuroscience has shown that "People rely on their eyes for most tasks, yet the information provided by our visual sensing system is often distorted, unreliable and subject to illusion." This is what actually happened with the spies. Because of their fears/ low self-esteem/ ulterior agendas, the spies twisted what they saw into an evil report- leading to catastrophic results.

At the very end of the Parsha; we find a phrase that we read as part of the third paragraph of Shema. In it we are warned: "וְלֹא־תִתְּוֹרוּ אַחֲרַי לְבַבְכֶם וְאַחֲרַי עֵינֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר־אֵתֶם זָנִים אַחֲרֵיהֶם" "and you shall not wander after your hearts and after your eyes after which you are going astray."

Rashi notes that the same word is used here and by the spies, hinting at the fact that the sin of the spies, like many other sins, occurred by allowing our eyes to deceive us.

Seeing is not always believing. However, I think the inverse is true much more often: Believing is indeed seeing. What we believe, our assumptions, perspectives and disposition, will greatly impact how we perceive people and relate to events around us. Barry Neil Kaufman in his book Happiness is a Choice tells the story of a young girl named Katie. Katie had severe disabilities, and after years of medical testing had been brought by her parents to Kaufman's institute in a last-ditch effort for help. Instead of discussing Katie's history with his staff or showing them her thick file, Kaufman told the staff to make their own assessment and recommendation, basing themselves primarily on their first-hand interactions with Katie. At the end of the day, one of the staff members was reviewing her notes with Katie's parents. She mentioned that she had held one of Katie's favorite puppets at arm's length, and encouraged the child to come and get it. "She took almost five steps to reach me," the staff member said. "She's a real plugger." Katie's father leaned forward aghast and said, 'But my daughter doesn't walk.' 'Oh,' the staff member said respectfully, 'I didn't know....'

While we should never judge someone until we've been in their shoes, it appears that this man viewed his daughter's limitations as an unalterable fact. The father's limited perspective became a self-fulfilling prophecy, and it did not reflect reality. Katie had the ability to walk, but her father had difficulty seeing this on his own, because he was unable to perceive that possibility. Believing profoundly impacts what we see. Let us develop the necessary attitudes that will enable us to see the good and great blessings and potential in our lives, in our community, and all around us.
